Dr. Hayley Watson is a clinical psychologist with a PhD in bullying prevention. She has been creating and delivering intervention programs for youth and practitioners in the US, the UK, Canada and Australia for the past 15 years. She is the founder of Open Parachute - a video-based middle and high school mental health curriculum program that uses documentary stories of real teens sharing their experiences of overcoming struggle as a platform for building resilience and reducing stigma in students. She has a research partnership with Columbia University and her programs are being delivered in schools across the US, Canada, and Australia. Hayley runs teacher trainings all over the world to empower educators with practical tools for wellbeing and for managing student mental health and behavior concerns in the classroom.

Dr. Dean Kriellaars is an associate professor at the University of Manitoba, Winnipeg, Canada. He is also a scientist at the Children’s Hospital Research Institute. Dr. Kriellaars has been awarded two major university teaching awards, as well as national and international awards for scientific research and innovation. He was awarded the Healthy Living Award for his outstanding activities in building community wellness in the province of Manitoba. He works with Canadian Sport for Life, Aspen Institute (Project Play), Canadian Centre for Substance Abuse, the National Circus School and Cirque du Soleil. He is an original designer of the PLAY Tools for assessment of physical literacy used across the world.
